HONGKONG, FRIDAY, SEPT. 13, 1878. works and improvements was the to settle the question about Ili. erection of a small lunatio asylum, for which a vote of $5,000 was obtained from the Legislative Counoil. Inspector Cradock stated yesterday that it had been usual to send insane Chinamen to the Tung Wah Hospital. His Excellency, in asking the Legislative Council to vote the $5,000, said that Chinese lunatics found in Hongkong were simply deported to the mainland This we presume is done only when the accommodation for insane persons at the Tung Wah Hospital is fully occupied, as appears to be the case at the present time. Whether or not His Excellency intends that part of the proposed new asylum shall be devoted to the accommodation of Chinese we are unable to say. His remarks, in placing the vote for the Asylum before the Council, scarcely determine the point, although, as the building is only to have accommodation for eight beds, it is perhaps unreasonable to suppose that it is intended to be used by Chinese as well as fereigners. It may be instructive to re foduce the observations of Mr Hennessy they were very brief-on assassinate His Majesty the Emperor of the occasion in question. "In the

You will readily understand that the presence of such cases would not conduce to a very successful one. the preservation of discipline in the gaol: that and other circumstances caused me to think of establishing a lunatio asylum. Chinese lunatics of Hongkong are simply deported to the mainland. My honourable friend the Chief Justice mentioned to me a very sad case. The son of an English professional gentleman -I need not mention names-came out here; he got an attack of lunacy, and he died in our prison. There have been other cases of people confined in the prison as lunatios who never ought to propose to ask you for the sum 25,000 for a small lunatic asylum, which, having provision for eight beds, will, J think, be sufficient; meanwhile I have

During the three years of mourning for his father, he studied English with so much diligence and success as to be now able to make himself fairly well understood in that language. He associates a great deal with foreigners in Peking, and appears to be one of the progressive school. We remember it was stated about twelve months ago that he had been appointed Minister to France, but that report is proved by the lapse of time to have been without foundation. Why Kwo has been recalled at this juncture we are unable even to conjecture. We doubt very much if strictly state reasons have anything at all to do with the step, and it is quite possible that a desire on the part of Kwo to get back to China, perhaps for reasons of health, or a desire on the part of the Marquis of Taeng to get to England, is one of the chief moving influences in the matter. Or possibly the Empresses Dowager and the Court are anxious to hear all about the voyage, England, and the Paris Exhibition, from the lips of a high mandarin who has actually witnessed the sights. Kwo's diary, and the work descriptive of foreign countries recently published under the auspices of Li Hung Chang himself, must do much to create an intense interest in foreign scenes among reading Chinese. The term of Kwo's appointment was for three years. His Excellency passed through Hongkong in An unfortunate Chinaman was brought December, 1876, and arrived in England before Mr Creagh yesterday on a charge in January, so that his appointment will of being insane and dangerous to the not expire until the end of next year. SUPREME COURT.

IN BONKRUPTOY. (Before His Lordship Acting Chief Justice Snowden). Sept. 13, 1878.

Cha Sz of the Tye Lee Hong, No. 17, Bonham Strand West, petitioned to be made a bankrupt. The liabilities as shown in the schedule amounted to $136,389.82, while the assets including bad and doubtful debts ascribed his failure to the bankruptcy of one of his debtors in Bangkok, who has failed owing the Tye Lee $90,000. The petition was granted, an advertisement to be inserted in all the local papers. Mr Dennys appeared in support of the petition.

Mr Snowden stated his intention this morning of refusing to any further work during the vacation, as he thought it unfair to the officers of the Court.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the "CHINA MAIL."

Hongkong, 13th September, 1878. Sir, -In your issue of last evening [notice that the Hon. Charles May is likely to become Acting Colonial Scoretary, and that in that case Mr J. J. Francis would take the Bench at the Magistracy. Now, Sir, can you or any of your readers tell me why or for what reason Mr Francis, who is distinctly an outsider, should be appointed to the vacancy. Can it be possible that there is not a single one of the Officers of the Civil Service fit to take the post of Acting Magistrate?

I venture to suggest to our Legislative Councillors that it is high time some of them asked a few leading questions on things in general.

Yours truly,

PERKIN WARBECK IN CHINA. (From China Review, Vol. VII.) The incidents composing the following story may be in the main accepted as strictly true. The general outline, though not the minor details, of the events referred to have been noticed in the European newspapers at Hongkong.

A worthy couple, peasants living in a village not far from Foochow, of the surname of Wang (T), were the happy parents of a son called San-yi (三義), or, as name might be translated in English, Mr. Three-principles Prince. This prename was somewhat a misnomer, for, as will be seen further on, he had no principles at all. His parents died early, and young Wang was left to fight-his way-in-the-world-as-best he could, for the personal estate of his parents was sworn to at a merely nominal sum. From what we hear, Wang's reputation in his own village was not of the highest: he was too lazy to work, and in fact was looked upon by all respectable people as a "loafer" and a "ne'er-do-weel" who would come to no good. He was, as others have been before him, a prophet without honour in his own country, and he was, therefore, perhaps wise in determining to change the scene of his labours, or more accurately, of his laziness. In the Spring of 1877 he migrated to Canton, where he found employment as "manof-all-work" in one of the Buddhist temples on the White Cloud Hills. Alas! even here he was still incompris. The priests bore with him for some time, but at last turned him out of his situation on the trumpery charge of being not only incorrigibly lazy, but not of the most immaculate moral character.

He seems to have left Canton nearly penniless, for when next we hear of this erratic genius he was begging his way on foot towards the north of the province, so poor was he that to keep body and soul together was the utmost he could do. The ordinary luxuries of a Chinaman were beyond his means: he could not even muster the few cash necessary to pay the barber, so his hair grew long all over his head till he offered a suspicious resemblance to a Taiping rebel. One incident of his overland travels which we are able to record shows that he still kept an eye alive to the main chance. Merely, no doubt, to vary the monotony of his journey, he robbed a fellow wayfarer of seven stone lions and a stone image of Kuan-yin, the Goddess of Mercy. It will be seen in the sequel that he made good use of what would seem to be at the first blush somewhat embarrassing booty. We must leave Mr. Wang for a while, however, in order to introduce some fresh personages,

Place aux dames. At a village called Chi-shui (本 水), "auspicious waters," about 10 miles from Chico-chou-fu (near Swatow); there lived a certain Madame (h'sn ()), who united the professions of nun and witch. About fifty years of age and blind; she cannot have possessed many personal attractions, yet she had a little coteris of admirers, whom may have fascinated by her magical, if not by her personal, charms. At any rate they were devout believers in her powers and yielded implicit obedience to her behests. Last year the spirit of prophecy came upon her in the month of November, and she informed her followers that the Goddess of Mercy had appeared to her in a vision and had warned her that trouble and tribulation were to come upon the wfoldin general and this port of China (Swatow) in particular during the ensuing spring; and had at the same time indicated the measures to be taken in order to avoid the universal ruin. These consisted in the building or procuring

* One of the distinguishing marks of a Talping was his long hair, which he allowed to grow out of contempt for the close-shaven tenets of the Menchu dynasty. Hence the Teipings were also called " Long haired Rebels,"

His Worship replied that there was of a boat of peculiar make, being constructherself—and he must commit. It was not | lia,) which was to be called, by command | punished more or less severely. Attorney General as grand jury thought | der," and was to be anchored in the river

diately set about obeying it. Among these (by a coincidence which would be almost incredible were it not for the unimpeachable source from which our information is derived,) were two brothers of the surname Huang (苗), one called Tso chou (作舟) "Make-boat," and the other Tso-chi (14 档), "Make-oars." These two undertook to furnish the "Triple Wonder" boat as required, and in a short time it was riding at anchor at the place indicated. To fill up the days of grace before the expected catastrophe, there were daily services on board, prayers, fastings and "joss-pidgin" generally. The more lucrative trade of fortunetelling was also plied by Madame Chien and attracted crowds of credulous peasants from the neighbouring villages. Prayers and fastings were harmless, but fortune-telling, as we all know, is tantamount to obtaining money under false pretences, and its practitioners are rogues and vagabonds. So the authorities interfered and sent Madame Ch'en and her (literally) crew to the rightare set down at $153,533.49. The Bankrupt about. The locality resumed its usual peaceful monotony, and the "Triple Wonder" swung empty at its anchor. Affairs were at this stage when Mr Wang of Three Principles, laden with his stone lions and his divine image, tramped one day into the village of the "Auspicious Waters." Here he heard the story of Madame Ch'en and her boat, and burned to make the acquaintance of such a kindred spirit. There seems to have been no difficulty about the introduction, and Wang had speedily added to his circle of intimates not only Madame Ch'en but also her dupes, -we beg pardon, we mean, her disciples. His lions and his goddess of mercy excited great ouriosity. How had he come by them? As regards the goddess of mercy, that was soon told. While passing through a wood an evening or two before, he had noticed a strange glow in a certain thicket. Determined to see what this meant, he searched the copse and found this image of the goddess, around which a lambent flame was playing. Once the image had passed intohis possession, the radiance died away and the image became as it was now.

As for the stone lions, well, that was a longer story. They had belonged to the Imperial Palace at Peking. He himself was none other than the unhappy Prince Ch'ihsiang (祖 前), say, "Felix Fortunatus," elder brother of the late Emperor Tungchih.† He was detested by the two Empresses, who wished his younger brother to reign; accordingly one day he was put alive into a coffin and, carried away, to an ante mortem burial. He contrived to make his escape en route and had soon collected an army, counting some adherents among the members of the Imperial Family. marched at the head of his troops on Peking, with the purpose of seating himself by force on the throne of his illustrious ancestors; unfortunately his army was attacked and dispersed by a tiger! Being left without support he had fled and made his way to this neighbourhood, with nothing left to tell of his lofty origin but his seven stone auditors. They seem to have actually believed it, convinced perhaps by the irrefragable testimony of the stone lions. At any rate His Imperial Highness, (or should we say, His Majesty?) was installed on board the "Triple Wonder," and his touching story was spread all over the country side. Our Colestial Perkin, the ci-devant penniless wanderer, found himself in clover. The peasants brought him supplies of provisions and money, till at last he thought it time to assume the state befitting his Imperial lineage and high destinies. He furnished himself accordingly with various articles which no Imperial pretender should be without; to wit, a sedan-chair, richly carved with five-clawed dragons, emblems of the Imperial dignity, and lined with dragonembroidered satin; he also unfurled his Imperial standard, bearing his name on one side and the inevitable dragon on the other. For a body-guard he selected a score of his followers whom he armed with muskets and dressed in gorgeous attire; on some of these he bestowed red, on others blue, buttons, earnests of favours yet to come when "the King should have his own again." In the meanwhile zealous adherents were spreading his cause in the country round.

Unfortunately it spread just a thought too far, for it came to the ears of the mandarins, and one fine day a body of soldiers made their appearance alongside the "Triple Wonder" and arrested H. I. H. Wang, Madame Ch'an and the other occupants of the boat, who seem to have offered little or no resistance. Brought before the authorities at Ch'ao-chou Fu, the Imperial claimant affected a haughty demeanour befitting his rank, and for all reply to the questions put to him, reiterated the story of his high birth and his unmerited misfortunes. Furnished with an amulet of wondrous power (doubteless a gift from Madame Ch'en, the severest bambooings had no effect on him. eight days and nights he was subjected to. Ohina Traders' las. At last the existence of an amulet was suspected, and, to counteract the charm, he was smeared with the blood of a black dog,-(this is sober fact). The effect was apparent at the next bembeeing. The offspring of a line of Emperora blubbered and confessed the unsophisticated truth: his origin, his life as temple-coolie, his theft of the stone lion and all. This little plot was spoilt by a coup d'état arranged by the Prince of Kung, in consequence of which the Prince of Yi and his followers were beheaded or hanished, and the style of the new Emperor's reign was altered to Tung Chih. Our friend Wang would seem to wish his hearers to believe that there had really been a Prince called Ch'i Hsiang, elder brother to T'ung Chih. However by the rule, rigidly adhered to, in conformity with which Imperial Princes are named. such a name as Ch'i Heing (礼前) is an impossibility; moreover Helen Fong had only

AN ELECTRIC AWARENER. - Mr.F. Poppard is the inventor of a curious contrive ance for awakening a sleeper at any required hour. The apparatus is to be fixed to an ordinary clock; it is so arranged thatwhen the hour-hand of the clock touches a button, an electric circuit is completed: the minute-hand passes over the button without effect. There are a series of holes for the different hours, into any one of which the button can be pushed, according to the time selected for a akening. The completion of the e'ectric circuit may ring a bell, or sound ary other of the numerous ordinary methods of alarm. But this contrivance has a yet more effective method for arousing a deaf man or any sleeper who is willing beforehand to prepare himself for a shock. A bracelet is provided which can be put on the wrist at the time of retiring ; This was the artless tale which Wang to t is fixible wires are attached, and the poured into the ears of his sympathising electric disc arge will pass through it at the appointed hour. A man who could lie down to pleasant dreams with such an apparatus fastened to his wrist would naturally need the violence of an electric shock to awaken him. - Electrician.
